I hunk we need to schedule a call/meeting to be briefed on our polling results. ASAP.

(to a smaller subset of the original chain): Teresa got word that the referendum folks are planning a press conference at City Hall next Tuesday. Given this news, we think we should expedite the hiring of a campaign manager. Happy to help recruit if needed. What do people on this chain think?

Also - this, in addition to the story idea I mentioned below, the national attention could be building:

If Sanders comes to a fulfillment center that could be a good media hook for us in the PNW during the campaign.

Might that be an interesting story? The anti-homeless folks taking advantage of homeless folks who need the money and more importantly need housing working against their own interest because the repeal efforts are so misleading?

In a particularly sad/tragic moment: I (along with Pete Holmes incidentally) was at a mtng at Community Passageways in Rainier Beach last night. One of the charismatic brilliant young leaders CP is training/supporting was talking about how he has a job petitioning. People asked what topics, and he said "to stop population, and to keep groceries affordable." I got a bad feeling and, sure enough ... "keep groceries affordable" = the head tax referendum. This kid could get all the signatures they need all on his own, he is THAT delightful.

The ultra-tragic part is that he is a chronically homeless and near-homeless justice system-involved young man whose particular experience of homelessness is what prompted some of us to propose CP's housing advocacy for such young people to be the sort of thing that the head tax could fund, in order to target funding to those facing greatest barriers.

We all had a good, painful, laugh about the ironies -- and he said "ok then, I'll slow it down as much as I can." :(

The Seattle head tax referendum is out. The pay is $3 per signature with a bonus of $1 so a total of $4. The firm heading the drive is Silver Bullet headed by Tim Mooney. We are doing everything we can to dissuade petitioners away

Mooney has a checkered record to say the least and in my opinion its underpriced to petitioners so we will see.

On the statewide front the gov't transparency bumped the price to petitioners to $1.50. And they seem to have a volunteer network, who knows
